Social Security deficit seen by budget official

WASHINGTON (AP) — The trust fund that provides the money for Social Security retirement checks will be depleted by early 1983 and could be $63.5 billion in the red by 1986, the Congressional Budget Office said Tuesday.

Unless Congress makes changes in the program, the deficit could grow to $128.9 billion by the start of the 1990 fiscal year, the arm of Congress told the House subcommittee on Social Security.

Congress could keep the system afloat by making such changes as placing a cap on the percentage of money retirees could receive in annual cost-of-living adjustments and raising the payroll tax rate, now at 6.65 percent, by 0.5 percent, it suggested.

Raymond C. Scheppach, the budget office's deputy director, testified that even if the economy improved during the next few years, the system would probably weaken.

"High levels of unemployment are likely to continue exerting pressure on the trust funds, as fewer workers contribute payroll taxes and as a number of older workers retire sooner than they would have if the labor market were stronger," he said.

But he said there probably will be an improvement in the system as the earnings of members of the post-World War II baby boom increase.

Some 36 million Americans receive benefits from the system, making it the single largest program in the federal government. Made up of three trust funds, it will pay out $138 billion this year to retired and disabled workers and their families.

Two of the trust funds, Disability Insurance and Hospital Insurance, are operating in the black. The other, the Old Age and Survivors Insurance, is nearing depletion.

The House subcommittee, chaired by Rep. J.J. Pickle, D-Texas, is hearing testimony on ways in which Congress can rescue the system.

Pickle said the major retirement fund "will run short of reserves to pay a month's benefits sometime in 1982."

But he added: "This is not an emergency. Nor is it the 12th hour."

Scheppach told the panel that in the 1983 fiscal year, which begins Oct. 1, 1982, the Old Age fund will have income of $143 billion and pay out $158.7 billion, with a year-end deficit of $8.2 billion.

By fiscal year 1986, he said, the Old Age fund will pay out $222.6 billion and have $203.7 billion in income. The deficit at the end of the year would have accumulated to $63.5 billion, he said.

The trust fund requires a balance of at least 9 to 12 percent to get the checks out in time.

How has the system gotten into such tight straits?

Scheppach said it was due to its sensitivity to the economy.

"When unemployment rises and individual earnings grow more slowly than expected, revenues fall below projected levels," he said. "The recent combination of high inflation and unemployment rates and low growth in real earnings has led to the deterioration in trust fund balances."

Residents of Evanston, Wyo., wait in line at the Wyoming First State Bank. The booming town is trying to adjust to the thousands of new people in town because of energy development in the area.

Boom towns short on money

EDITOR'S NOTE: In the second of a two-part series, The Daily Universe examines measures which may be taken to reduce adverse effects of fast growth in boom towns. Gov. Scott Matheson of Utah proposed five bills to the legislature dealing with the subject.

By LEE DAVIDSON
News Editor

Energy development in Utah, Wyoming and Colorado created thousands of new jobs, brought in thousands of people, made small towns into boom towns and created dozens of problems.

The adjustment from small town to boom town is difficult and requires planning and financial help, according to city officials.

The biggest problem we faced was that the boom hit long before we received taxes from the developments which created the boom," said Dennis Ottley, mayor of Evanston, Wyo.

The city governments had to hire more policemen, extend water and sewage systems, hire more school teachers, build more schools and manage growth for a cost of 7,500 on the budget of a city with a population of 10.

Evanston officials estimate the city will expand to a population of 30,000 within the next five years.

We went to Cheyenne in an attempt to persuade the legislature to provide money so we could provide necessary services," he said. "The legislature was only interested in debating whether they should raise the aid limit to 65 m.p.h. They are not interested in what is essential to our people."

Meanwhile, Utah, is fighting the same problem.

"Evanston needs help from the legislature," said City Manager Shane Luck. "The valley could be ruined if we do not raise the necessary funds before the boom really hits."

Evanston City provides services to a total of 16,000 residents in the Ashley Valley. City officials expect 30,000 residents to move into the area in the next five years.

Gov. Scott Matheson proposed a package of legislation at the opening of this year's legislative session to let potential boom towns receive improvement funds to cope with fast growth.

One bill calls for the prepayment of taxes by developers to provide cities with money to expand services, according to Karyn Severson, administrative assistant to the governor for legislative affairs.

The bill would require industries to file an impact plan before construction begins to allow the cities to collect prepayment of taxes and allow the companies a tax credit.

Another bill of the package provides for the establishment of a 2 percent coal severance tax. It would also raise severance taxes on other minerals to provide money for an ongoing capital improvement fund and to establish another fund to return money to energy development-impacted cities.

Both bills have been introduced in the legislature, but no public hearings on them have been held. About two weeks remain for the legislature to debate and act on the bills.

The other three bills in Matheson's package to provide further state assistance to impacted areas have not yet been formally introduced in the legislature.

"I'm worried that the legislature is so concerned with cutting taxes that they may cut revenues to the cities," said Luck. "That would hurt impacted areas."

Evanston did not wait for state funds on many projects. According to Ottley, the city has applied to a variety of federal agencies and received funds for a new water and sewage system, funds to modernize the airport and money to improve roads.

Many problems associated with boom towns must be handled locally.

Vernal and Evanston have had problems with "moderate urban sprawl" which some residents called poor zoning. In parts of Evanston, expensive houses are surrounded by less expensive prefabricated homes and small trailer houses.

Both Evanston and the surrounding Uinta County have planning commissions to cope with the problem. However, some residents interviewed said they want better zoning planned because growth is occurring at a dizzying pace and is not being controlled as well as it should be.

In Vernal the city and county planning offices are working on an interim growth plan, according to Luck.

Both cities have also been able to control the number of bars, saloons and other undesirable businesses.

Stadium decision imminent decision is expected by the end of the month on the proposed expansion of Cougar Stadium.

The bids were opened Feb. 11, and we expected to take about two weeks studying them. That brings us to about Feb. 25," said Paul Richards, director of BYU's public communications department. "We will take a little longer if we need to."

Richards said officials are considering not only the original plan of double-deck expansion above the existing grandstands, but also variations of that project, or scrapping the whole idea.

If there isn't a bid we have the money to accept, we'll have to decide what to do — whether we will raise more money, or come up with other alternatives," Richards said.

Richards said BYU engineers are studying the 10 bids submitted on the original project and its variations, looking for ways to bring the stadium closer to BYU's original estimates. Frills, such as carpeting in the VIP areas, are among "1,001 things" that can be trimmed, Richards said. "But nothing will be done that would infringe on the safety of the stadium."

BYU engineers are also checking the bids to make sure proposed budgets are realistic.

Layton Construction Co. of Salt Lake City was the project's lowest bidder, but the company's bid of $5.5 million was $5 million more than original estimates.

BYU officials are concerned the bids are too far above estimates to be accepted "as is," and could be even higher by inflation by the time the project is complete.

Officials at Layton Construction declined comment on their bids.

Preston Creer, vice president of planning for J. Ron Stacey Engineering and Construction, low bidder on two variations of the project, observed, "It's not unusual to see bids so high. I've seen them double the original estimates before."

"A preliminary estimate is pretty tough to come up with," he added.

Asked why bids for the stadium expansion were so far above estimates, Creer answered, "I don't think inflation had a lot to do with it."

Special problems have been created by the unsuitability of the sandy, water-saturated ground under the stadium for the type of expansion proposed. Those problems were discovered after original project estimates were made.

Richards said, "It means more time and more materials involved in sinking the steel pilings in the ground which must support the expansion. It just basically comes down to a matter of time and steel."

A spokesman for U.S. Steel said inflation may push the price of steel up 22-27 percent from the time the first estimates were made to the time of the stadium's completion. "A real exact estimate would be hard to come up with now because so many different types of metal will be used in the stadium," the spokesman said.

Richards said the complexity of the project varies somewhat from the east side to the west side of the stadium.

"The (soil) strata is similar," he said. But each side will require different handling. For instance, the press box will have to be removed from the west side, as well as the stadium lights. Complications with the foundation mean the west side would be built much closer to Canyon Road. Since construction would not be finished in 1981, some temporary seating and a temporary press box would be required. Pedestrian traffic might have to be rerouted, and some seats in the construction area might be closed off.

"It's a complex project," Richards confirmed. "Many factors must be considered before a decision is made."

A victim of the uncertainty involving the stadium expansion is the David O. McKay Institute, which has its offices under the west bank of the stadium seats. The institute had been scheduled to move out of the offices to clear the area for construction crews by the end of the month.

Plea bargaining favored

By GAYLEN WEBB
Universe Staff Writer

People get upset when criminals get "let off" through plea bargaining, but according to Brent Bullock, administrative assistant for the county attorney, "it's something the system has got to have."

Court costs at the minimum are $500 for each case, Bullock said. "Why burden the taxpayer with additional trials and charges that the probation and parole office or Board of Pardons will dismiss anyway?"

"If a guilty plea to one charge will satisfy society, it's ridiculous to bring up all the other charges," Bullock said. "The penalty does not get more severe with additional counts."

Bullock said plea bargaining in Utah County is not the same as it is in Salt Lake County or in other states. "They plea bargain to clear the (court) calendars," he said. "We plea bargain only for the benefit of the state."

According to Bullock, the Utah Fourth District Court is known for its ability to bring cases to trial quickly.

Plea bargaining generally means starting with a high charge and then reducing it in hopes that the defendant will plead guilty to the lesser charge, thus eliminating drawn-out court cases, Bullock said.

Zola Dupass, court clerk for Judge Allen B. Sorenson, said the defendant is often a youth who has gone astray. "We're not trying to put them all in prison," she said.

According to Mrs. Dupass, plea bargaining is used when evidence is lacking for the prosecution in an effort to maintain control of the case.

According to the county attorney's policy there is no plea bargaining, but there are exceptions, according to Bullock.

Some of the exceptions are vulnerability of victims, weakness in evidence, and cases where there are many charges and a guilty plea might be obtained for an individual charge.

Bullock said county attorney's policy is to not plea bargain below one count of the original charge.

The defense counsel has to make the first move in plea bargaining. The county attorney will only consider it when it may be to the best advantage of the state, he said.

Price tag of rescue placed at $1,000

Police officials estimated the cost of Monday night's rescue of Mike Lewis, a sophomore majoring in art design, from Y Mountain at $1,000. Provo Police Lt. Bud Gillman said the cost of the rescue was "about average."

Gillman said the city would pay for Lewis's rescue.

Stephanie Thrasher, a KEYY Radio employee, said Provo City called and asked to use their 8-million candle-power spotlight.

Gillman said the light was used three hours and the city would be charged $150 for using it. However, Russell J. Heaton, KEYY manager, said the decision had not yet been made on whether or not the city would be charged for the use of the light.

The rescuers also used a war surplus light from BYU. A spokesman for the BYU Physical Plant said student government owns the light. He said he was uncertain if the city would be charged for using it.

BYU Security Chief Robert W. Kelshaw said two Honda motorcycles were used by the rescue team as well as the spotlight, but he did not think there would be any charge.

He said there are usually several instances of students being stranded up at Y Mountain or Rock Canyon each year.

"It's a situation like a lot of other things," Gillman said. "We don't realize our inadequacies."

He said people usually get stranded in the early part of the year when the weather starts to turn nice. People think nothing will happen to them, so they head up to the mountains.

"This particular vertical-type rock we have is inviting, but dangerous," he said.

Gillman said anyone who plans to go hiking should make sure somebody goes with him (or her), or at least make sure someone knows the general area the hiker plans to explore.

Another problem stranded hikers have is a lack of proper clothing, he said. The weather usually changes unexpectedly this time of year, and exposure problems are a dangerous risk, he said.

"Have the right equipment, dress properly, and plan where you're going," Gillman said. "Be aware that there's danger out there."

Storm hits west coast

Storm winds gusting to hurricane force Tuesday pounded the Pacific Coast, felling trees and snapping power lines, and forecasters warned that approaching rains might bring renewed flooding to the Northwest.

To the north in Oregon and Washington, flood-swollen rivers were returning to their banks, but another blustery weather system was churning toward the coast, raising the possibility of more drenching rain and high winds, the National Weather Service reported.

Work won't close cafeteria

By MARC ENGGAS

Although work is being completed on the Wilkinson Center cafeteria addition, patrons of the cafeteria can still receive service, BYU Food Services personnel said Tuesday.

Paul R. Johnson, systems manager of BYU Food Services, said the completed addition, which should accommodate 500 to 700 more people a day, will offer several improvements over the current services and facilities.

One improvement includes a better menu, he said.

"We'll have thinly-sliced meats for sandwiches, a salad bar, and a new ethnic food area separate and different from the one in the snack bar," Johnson said.

"We could have closed down," he said. "It would have been much better for us, but we want to give the patron the best service we can."

Any inconvenience caused by the construction will be shorter than expected, though, because the contractor anticipates finishing by April instead of the original July 1 completion date, he said.

Johnson said workers had to close the regular cafeteria line temporarily at one time because the ceiling of the addition was lower than the ceiling in the original cafeteria, which had to be replaced. Johnson also said the expanded shopping area, or cafeteria line, is going to be carpeted when the addition is completed.

"What we're trying to do is to set up a better facility," he said, and added the addition will have carefully chosen decorations.

"The decorating for the atmosphere we want to set is being very carefully considered, getting away from the institutional approach of gray or white walls and stainless steel," he said.

The addition will even have conversation rooms with couches for faculty and students, Johnson said, but users will need to schedule them.

With the added space, BYU Food Services also plans to improve its catering business, he said. The addition will have eight multi-purpose rooms for luncheons, seminars and informal discussions. These rooms will also be available to faculty and students when not being used for catering, he said.

Friday to be last day for Banyan photos

The deadline for getting yearbook pictures taken is Friday, and the last chance to order a Banyan will be March 20.

There will only be a limited number of yearbooks available to buy when the Banyan is distributed in September, so order them early, said Lorna Karza, editor-in-chief for the yearbook.

Banyan week began Tuesday and will run through Friday with a display booth in the ELWC Stepdown Lounge.

The Banyan staff will have cameras set up for students to "shoot themselves" from 12 to 2 p.m. Wednesday and Friday and 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Thursday.

The "shoot yourself" campaign is an effort to get students involved in the production of the yearbook, Miss Karza said.

Any student may think up a creative way of taking his picture, or get together with a group of friends and "shoot themselves."

The Banyan is also in need of creative quotes about BYU for sections of the yearbook. The best quotes will be awarded prizes, said Miss Karza.

Every day a prize will be given away. The prizes include Anne Murray concert tickets, ski passes and dinners to a local restaurant, she said.

In Evanston, "We have a city ordinance which limits the amount of liquor licenses we may issue per 1,000 residents. We have issued all the licenses allowed by law," said Ottley.

Evanston and Vernal officials are trying to plan for even more growth by predicting future needs for services and evaluating present limitations.

Sometimes residents do not help their own cause.

Vernal residents recently voted against a bond issue to provide money for new schools. The schools are now filled to capacity, Luck said.

McConkie

Three keys to salvation: creation, fall, atonement

By FLINT STEPHENS
Universe Staff Writer

man's eternal salvation rests on creation, the fall and atonement, said Elder Bruce R.
McConkie of the LDS Council of the Twelve during Tuesday's devotional assembly.

Throughout his remarks, Elder McConkie stressed the idea that the three keys to salvation are inseparable eternal verities which provide the foundation for the plan of Jesus Christ.

Elder McConkie recounted the plan of Christ's suffering and atonement in Gethsemane and Golgotha, then he spoke of the value of the acts for the human race.
Salvation is in Christ and comes by atoning sacrifice," he said.

But there had been no atonement for Christ, there would be no salvation. Elder McConkie also said that without the atonement, men would be subject to the fall and would be damned eternally.

And as the atonement is, it can't stand alone, according to Elder McConkie. "It has roots, it has a reason for being," he said.
The atonement is the child of the fall and the fall is the father of the atonement."

According to Elder McConkie,

the fall comes from the plan of God and as a result of the fall, five things exist for man.

The five things are temporal death, spiritual death, mortality (which Elder McConkie described as life where there is death), procreation and a probationary state.

Elder McConkie quoted scriptures by Moroni and Paul to show the relationship between the fall and the atonement. "It is just as important to believe in the fall as it is to believe in the atonement," he said.

All things were on a higher level before the fall, according to Elder McConkie. He explained that before the fall there was no death, and since the fall, men have become carnal, sensual and devilish. Elder McConkie said when the earth is redeemed, death will cease.

After again saying the creation, fall and atonement are one, Elder McConkie said he had not made any statements that can't be found either within the scriptures, or in comments made by previous theologians.

The creation refers to the works of Elohim, Jehovah and Michael, according to Elder McConkie. He said Michael is Adam, and he is the presiding high priest over the whole earth.

Fluenza

New strain identified

While the number of statewide influenza cases is dropping, BYU students are still reporting a high number of cases, according to a state official.

raig Nichols, director of communicable disease control for the Utah Department of Health, said
Health Services reported 37 cases of influenza for the week ending last Friday.

Nichols also said another strain of influenza virus has been identified among Utah flu patients. This strain, he said, is more likely to affect college-age people.

Nationally, the A-Bangkok strain of influenza is generally on the decrease," Nichols said.

But he said BYU, the University of Utah and Utah State are reporting more cases.

Nichols said a new influenza strain called A-Brazil had been exported in Utah since its appearance in several other states.

Now it has been verified in Utah," Nichols said.

He said none of the A-Brazil cases reported in the state had been among college students. Nichols said the A-Bangkok strain usually strikes older people in other states, while the A-Brazil strain usually affects college-age and younger population.

Y college bowl team wins

By MARK TRUNNELL
Universe Staff Writer

The BYU College Bowl Team emerged with first-place honors at a regional tournament held at the University of Utah Friday.

"This is the best-balanced team we've had," coach Todd Britsch said of the victorious Cougar squad. He said the team scored a combined total of 1,490 points for all tournament matches compared to a total of 800 for its opponents.

The BYU team played Weber State, New Mexico State and the University of Utah to win the four-team double-elimination tournament.

The team first beat Weber State 410 to 100, Britsch said. The Cougars then lost to Utah, which had beaten New Mexico State in the first round.

"We didn't start off well that second game," said Britsch of the 290 to 205 loss. The Cougars next beat New Mexico, 305 to 95.

That victory earned them the chance to play Utah again. This time they beat Utah, 325 to 145.
Next came the final match with the Utes to determine the regional champion.

The Cougars won again in the final, beating Utah by a score of 245 to 170. Britsch said the win gave the team a berth in the national tournament which will be played in Charlotte, N.C., in March.

"They (the Utes) had a strong team," Britsch said. "That last game was tight all the way. I was pleased to see us bounce back and play so well."

Britsch said the national tournament will include 24 schools from around the country. BYU team members are Jim VanderRoest (team captain), David Holdsworth, Donald Doering, Robert Price, Mark Clemens and Kent Budge.

3.5 accidents per million miles in 1980, according to state
safety officials.

system of all accidents in the state. The information is computer coded by city, county and by most hazardous stretches of highway.

"The accident rate is the addition of both the number of fatalities and accidents throughout the state," said C.
Arthur Guerts, safety studies engineer.

"What this really translates into is about 25 lives saved and an estimated 2,600 accidents that didn't occur."

"The safety indicator of accident and fatality rates continues to demonstrate an overall decrease of approximately 4 percent per year since 1966, the year the first Highway Safety Act was passed,"
Guerts said.

According to the Commission of Public Safety, the fatality rate actually increased last year to 333 deaths in comparison with 328 reported in 1979. The total traffic volume also dropped by 1.4 percent.

Guerts cited several programs, including driver modification, vehicle worthiness and highway environment, as contributing factors in the reduction of the total accident rate.

"The 55 mile per hour speed limit receives a lot of emphasis, but it is only one of many programs serving the motorist to reduce accidents," he said.

The driver modification program includes driver training, licensing, the court system and working with drivers cited for driving under the influence of alcohol.

The vehicle safety program is mainly overseen by the federal government and the requirements involved in car manufacturing.
Utah also requires a safety inspection for all vehicles licensed in the state.

BYU swimmer Chris Smith displays the butterfly stroke. The Cougars will face Utah, the defending WAC champions, Thursday at 4 p.m. in the Richards Building Swimming Pool. Coach Tim Powers said the team needs a lot of fan support.

Y to face Utah swimmers

The most important dual meet of the year takes place Thursday at 4:30 p.m. in the Richards Building Pool.

The BYU men's swimming team will take on the University of Utah, the defending WAC champs.

According to Coach Tim Powers, the rivalry between the two schools is intense and is one of the most competitive meets of the season. Each year, the largest crowds gather for this meet, and some of the most exciting races take place.

"My biggest concern is that Utah will have more people there than us," said Powers.

"Utah soundly defeated us earlier in the season," Powers said, "but many of the races were close. If we can get some fan support, the scores might go our way."

The men's team is coming off an impressive victory over the University of Wyoming, but will have its hands full as it attempts to knock off the experienced Utes in the conference's best swimming rivalry.

The Utes themselves defeated the same Wyoming team just a few days after the Cougar victory.

The meet will be a tune-up for both schools as they prepare for the WAC Championships March 5-7.

Miller coming back

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bob Goalby stood on a balcony overlooking the 18th green at the Pebble Beach Golf Links. He watched Arnold Palmer try to make his way through a smiling, excited, autograph-seeking crowd.

"The man is amazing," Goalby said about Palmer "I don't think I could handle it."

Palmer loves it. The public loves him and he loves them.

Johnny Miller, who has been there, touched on that aspect of stardom recently. Miller, once the game's Golden Boy, has fought his way out of a long, puzzling slump and now is playing with something approaching the authority of his glory years.

He won once last year. He's won once already this year and could have won another.

"Right now I'm playing pretty good," said Miller. "My game is not great, but it's good enough to win more than once a year."

"I don't know if I'll ever be back to where I was in '74 and '75," he said. "My eyes are wide open now. From the top, I went to the bottom. I saw a lot of things I never saw before."

Y netters suffer first dual loss

A former BYU tennis player led Arizona State to an 8-1 victory over the previously undefeated Cougars in dual competition at San Diego.

Paul Bernstein handed his former BYU teammate Rick Fought his second loss in six matches as the Sun Devils' number one singles player won 2-6, 6-3, 6-4.

The Cougars' single victory came after the final outcome had already been determined. The number three doubles team of Chris Spackman and Russ Thompson beat ASU's number three doubles squad 6-3, 3-6, 6-3.

The match was a lot closer than the score as three singles' matches went three sets and the number one doubles match was won by ASU 7-5, 7-6.

In number two singles, Matt Murphy fell to Gary Donnelly of ASU 6-4, 4-6, 6-2. Tim Anderson downed the Cougars' Rich Bohne 4-6, 6-4, 6-4. ASU's Andy Krantz defeated Mike Codiga 6-3, 6-3. Chris Spackman lost to Sun Devil Jim Settles 7-6, 6-1 and Jeff Tomey defeated BYU's Rich Kirkham 6-4, 6-3.

Results of Tuesday's match against San Diego State was unavailable. The Cougars will face 17th-ranked San Diego on Wednesday before playing in the powerful San Diego Intercollegiate Tournament Thursday through Saturday.

Debate lingers over nation's best college cage center

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

There may be dissension about the identity of college basketball's best center, for that is the nature of debate. But this year, the choice seems narrowed to two men; Ralph Sampson, a 7-4 sophomore from Virginia, and Steve Johnson, a 6-10 1/2 senior from Oregon State.

Neither man will offer an assessment of his own relative merits, so the decision, as strongly as we might resist, falls to those of us who digest our basketball in front of the tube or from the seats.

Sampson is one of the tallest men ever to play the game, and as a sophomore, he has grown out of some of the coltishness that marked his play last season. He moves well around the basket and has added a 10-foot turnaround jumper to his repertoire of effective scoring techniques. Past 10 or 12 feet, he is ineffective as a scorer, but he seldom shoots from the outside.

Johnson is an inexperienced senior. He played only one year of prep ball because his high school, San Geronimo in San Bernadino, Calif., did not offer the sport until his senior year. He was a good pupil under Oregon State Coach Ralph Miller, however, and has become a veritable scoring machine. Around the basket, he moves with explosive quickness, but his range is limited to 8-10 feet.

Through their first 20 games this season, both men average about 20 points a game, but Johnson's efficiency is much greater, shooting at an NCAA record clip of 75.9 percent to 59.8 percent for Sampson. Johnson set the NCAA field goal percentage record of 71.0 percent last year.

At 210 pounds, Sampson appears to lack the strength to be a dominating rebounder, while Johnson looks the part, weighing a burly 230. However, Sampson averages 12.6 rebounds per game, Johnson 8.1.

The almost completed BYU observatory broods over a remote site. The observatory will be in use by spring term, despite a month-long delay.

West of Utah Lake

Building nears finish

By MARC ENGGAS
Universe Staff Writer

Despite challenging terrain and zoning difficulties, the new BYU observatory on top of West Mountain, overlooking the southern tip of Utah Lake, should be in operation by spring term.

Edwin Cozzens, director of BYU planning and architecture, said the building was scheduled to be completed March 31.

Cozzens said that due to an apparent misunderstanding concerning Utah County building permits, the observatory will be finished a month late.

BYU had to stop construction for three weeks shortly after beginning the project to obtain a different permit than that originally obtained for the project.

Difficult to reach

Also, work cannot go forward on the project when there is any snow or inclement weather, he said.

To get to the project, workers and equipment must be transported up five miles of winding, single-lane gravel road edged by cliffs.

Cozzens said Harold McNamara, the astronomy faculty director of the project, felt West Mountain is one of the last places in the United States where the night sky is minimally affected by ground lighting. Because of this, BYU decided to build the observatory in its present location, he said.

Cozzens said the land on West Mountain was the best available which would provide 360 degree visibility around the observatory, and was easily obtained from its owner, the United States Bureau of Land Management.

Cozzens said BYU is completing unique zoning arrangements for a caretaker's house to be located on the site.

He said this arrangement for zoning and leasing has been formulated and mutually agreed upon by the Bureau of Land Management, BYU and Utah County — Utah County exercising jurisdiction over the land the observatory is being built on.

Caretaker house

Jeff Mendenhall, director of the Utah County Planning Commission, said BYU encountered difficulty in its plans for the caretaker house. He said BYU did not lease the amount of land required by zoning ordinances for the building of a house.

Mendenhall said the land on which the observatory is being built is designated as mining and grazing land. The zoning requires a minimum of 50 acres before a dwelling may be built on mining- and grazing-zoned land. BYU originally only leased five from the BLM, he said.

Cozzens said since BYU needed to have the caretaker's house to protect the observatory, Utah County suggested BYU lease an additional 45 acres from the BLM.

Recently, he said, BLM approved BYU's request for the lease of the extra 45 acres and is drawing up the papers for the transaction.

Under the arrangement, Cozzens said BYU will only lease, not fence or use, the 45 acres. Because BYU does not need the land it will be left open for other uses.

McNamara, a professor of physics and astronomy, said the new observatory will be better than the present one located on the fourth floor of the Eyring Science Center because it will be in an area less affected by three forms of pollution.

The campus area produces two forms of what he called "light pollution." He said the light adversely affects the picture an electronic telescope produces by making the stars appear less bright.

Citizens seek sidewalk repairs

Repairing or replacing run-down and potentially hazardous sidewalks was the primary use suggested for a $551,000 federal grant by Orem citizens in a city council meeting.

In the first of two required hearings on the use of money in Orem's Community Development Block Grant (CDBG), Orem citizens from the Lake Ridge, Cherry Hill, Windsor, Hillcrest Neighborhood, Geneva and Sharon areas, requested the city council use the money to fix their neighborhoods' sidewalks.

Their major complaint was they either had no sidewalks, or the sidewalks they had were in such poor condition people walked in the street for fear of tripping and falling over cracks, holes and uneven edges in the sidewalks.

The money is available through a special grant program administered by the Department of Housing and Urban Development. Orem's CDBG Director Brent Garlick said, in order to receive the grants, which come in three-year packages, the city agrees to accomplish a set of goals approved by the department.

He said one of the goals the city agreed to was to build 40 units of low income housing — a goal which was prescribed to the city by the Carter Administration. The city has made a commitment to build 80 such units.

Provo mall project: funds may be cut

Federal funds for a downtown Provo mall project could be cut out or trimmed when the new administration makes its budget public.

Ron Madsen, housing and redevelopment program manager, said although Urban Development Action Grant (UDAG) funding may be cut, he and city officials think the project is important enough to try to build the proposed mall without federal funding.

"I don't think we'll really know where we stand until the president comes out with the new budget," Madsen said.

Provo City officials have been working on a downtown hotel project for quite some time, Madsen said, and have been planning the mall project for 18 months.

A UDAG official in Denver said $2.2 million has been reserved for the downtown hotel project. He said his office is waiting for legal documents proving Provo has enough financial commitments to receive the grant.

Madsen said a loan application submitted by Provo officials for the mall had been passed from Denver to Washington for final approval. After approval is received, the city must show enough financial commitment to support need for the grant.

"We have two major stores that have said if a third store goes, they'll go," Madsen said.

He said the mall should house 100 small stores and three major department stores.

The hotel would be located between 100 West and 200 West at 100 North. The mall would be located between 200 West and 500 West from Center Street to 200 North.

"Some of them (the stores) would be local, and some would be national," Madsen said.

According to Madsen, the city is facing a March 31 deadline for the downtown hotel, but no deadlines have been set for the mall project.

Toe gives kick to corny drink

DAWSON CITY, Yukon (AP) — An Alberta woman with nine toes has kicked in the missing ingredient for a drink that has made this gold rush city's Eldorado Hotel famous.

The drink is a sour-toe cocktail, a beer glass brimming with champagne and garnished with a pickled human toe instead of an olive or cherry.

Since 1973, more than 700 people downed the potion, leaving the toe behind for the next customer. But last summer a thirsty customer knocked back the works and digested a Klondike institution.

To appease the tourists, hotel owner Dick Stevenson, the originator of the drink, advertised for a new toe — and now he has one, corn and all.

The donor is an anonymous 55-year-old woman who lives near Fort Saskatchewan, Alberta, a few miles northeast of Edmonton.

She sold Stevenson the middle toe of her right foot, pickled in a jar of alcohol for the 19 years since it had been amputated because of a severe corn, for $100.

"It's way worse looking than the old one," Stevenson said with enthusiasm, the two diamonds in his front teeth sparkling as he smiled.

Stevenson found the original toe pickled in a jar of rum in his cabin, where it had been left by a frostbitten trapper who shot it off to prevent gangrene 50 years ago.

Lilly Tomlin, as "The Incredible Shrinking Woman," goes grocery shopping the easy way. The show is playing locally now.

Tiny lady has poor script

By MARA CALLISTER
Asst. Entertainment Editor

The moral tone carried by John Ritter in last year's "Captain Avenger" makes a new appearance in "The Incredible Shrinking Woman," starring Lily Tomlin. But this attempt is clearly second best.

Students looking for an entertaining, unobjectionable new movie may choose the "Shrinking Woman," but they will leave feeling shortchanged of their money.

It's thought-provoking, yes — but no more entertaining than an episode of television's "Love Boat."

In the show, Lily Tomlin plays the model wife of a promoter of new products: perfume, glue and soap. When she begins to shrink after contamination by a host of artificial substances, she symbolizes the American housewife's loss of individuality.

Like "Captain Avenger," Ms. Tomlin defends the worth of every "little guy" in our society.

Refreshingly, the show does not have objectionable innuendoes or violence. It simply tells the story of a suburban housewife. Too bad its poor script could so debilitate an otherwise timely idea, fine acting, expensive sets and artistic cinematography.

After seeing the show, Tim Tingey, a junior in Asian studies from Provo, said, "I wouldn't see it again. On a four-star scale, I'd give it two stars." That is a fair review.

It did, however, receive favorable comments. One newly married BYU student said, "I got a big kick out of it." And the only comment Cameron Smith, a senior in engineering from Ottawa, Canada, could make was "awfully inspirational."

For the more cynical, a few surprises in the show will relieve them when the hoaky script makes the audience restless. First, notice the change of character in Lily Tomlin.

As Pat Kramer, she looks beautiful and mature; her old characters emerge only in her cameo appearance as the nasal-voiced phone operator and her minor role as a bossy neighbor.

Second, the technical crew must have loved filming the movie: most of the time they shot it through a pink filter so the audience can see life through rose-colored glasses.

The Kramer kitchen smolders in pink, the house bulges with garish bottles and ugly plastic toys.

Most impressive, certainly, is the shrinkage of Mrs. Kramer. Hollywood can do almost anything imaginable with special effects these days and they make the unbelievable, believable in "The Incredible Shrinking Woman."

But a good script still makes a good show.

Why speak so harshly of the film's script? Because the movie had the potential to delight and change its audience; instead, it only left them thinking.

Students who grow tired of the weaknesses in the plot can find relief by gasping at the variety of tacky outfits worn — they are a rainbow of manmade colors.

Or the audience can goggle at Pat Kramer's neighbors who act like fill-ins for a California commercial.
